

Final Environmental Impact Statement and Proposed Land Use Plan Amendments for the Boardman to Hemingway Transmission Line Project

ERRATA
November 18, 2016

VOLUME 1A

Chapter 3

Map 3-1. The map depicts the ‘Ladd Marsh Wildlife Management Area.’ Per the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, the correct name of the area is Ladd Marsh Wildlife Area.

VOLUME 2A Map Volume (MV)

MV-6. The map depicts the ‘Ladd Marsh WMA.’ Per the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, the correct name of the area is Ladd Marsh Wildlife Area.

MV-11, Fish Habitats. Regarding data sources, Chinook salmon distribution is used as a surrogate for coho salmon distribution/Essential Fish Habitat in the Grande Ronde River (Pacific Fishery Management Council and National Marine Fisheries Service. 2014. Final Environmental Assessment and Regulatory Impact Review – Pacific Coast Salmon Plan Amendment 18: Incorporating Revisions to the Pacific Salmon Essential Fish Habitat. September 2014) and Rock Creek (Personal Communication. Les Naylor, Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation (CTUIR). August/September 2015. Email and telephone discussions between Richard Pastor, Bureau of Land Management, Katey Grange, Bonneville Power Agency, and Les Naylor, CTUIR regarding Chinook salmon distribution within areas of the Boardman to Hemingway Transmission Line Project, the Upper Grande Ronde River subbasin and Rock Creek, based on data from CTUIR's Fisheries Research, Monitoring, and Evaluation program during 2011 to 2015).

VOLUME 2B Map Volume

MV-15. The map depicts the ‘Ladd Marsh WMA.’ Per the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife, the correct name of the area is Ladd Marsh Wildlife Area.